

PART 4: ADDITIONS

Records on Microfilm:

Maury County Episcopal Church Records, 1809-2001. Microfilm Only Collection. Mf. 1970.

This collection includes the records of three churches: St. Peter's Episcopal Church, St. John's Episcopal Church, and St. Mark's Episcopal Church. St. Peter's Episcopal Church is the only church of the three that is still in regular use, and it cares for St. John's Church Cemetery, an official burial ground of Tennessee Episcopal Bishops. St. John's and St. Mark's shared a deacon at one time; St. John's is now used only on Whitsunday.

In the records of St. Peter's, Sunday school records, church registries, treasurer's reports, Minutes of the Vestry, and service records give detailed notes on various aspects of the church, including attendance, birth and death, baptisms and financial records. From St. John's Church are two prayer books, a Bible, and a copy of the Old Testament all given to St. John's by A.J. Polk in 1841. The material from St. John's Episcopal Church is historically significant as the founder of St. John's was Leonidas Polk, the "Bishop-General of the Confederacy," and the church was the site of Civil War skirmishes. Some material on the history of St. John's is also included along with a ledger from St. Mark's. This collection also contains the records of St. Mary's Guild which merged with St. Peter's Episcopal Church, Holy Comforter Episcopal Mission, St. Peter's Women of the Church, and the Holy Cross in Mt. Pleasant, Tennessee.

"Memorial of the First Baptist Church, 1820-1863" [handwritten manuscripts of R. B. C. Howell]. Davidson County. Microfilm Only Collection. Mf. 1997

Consists of two volumes of R. B. C. Howell's "Memorial of the First Baptist Church," a handwritten manuscript on the history of First Baptist Church, Nashville, Tennessee, written during Howell's imprisonment in Nashville during the Civil War. Volume 1 is believed to be Howell's original manuscript, housed at the church since its writing; Volume 2 was discovered in private hands in 2011 and acquired by the church. It is a slightly different version of the same manuscripts but written in Howell's hand. It is possible that he recopied his work at a later date with some editing. The manuscripts recounts the history of First Baptist Nashville from its organization in 1820 through 1863, the time of Howell's writing.

Also included as introductory information are exhibit materials kept by the church's History committee relating to R. B. C. Howell, his family, and his career as pastor. These items include photographs and document copies with their exhibit caption cards.
